LEATHER

They say leather remembers. Shapes, creases, scratches, patinas. Some of my first visual remnants of leather hide in the boots and gloves from my father's military ensemble guised in mysterious shades of brown. Lately, new-gen homes are holding on to a new kind of leather, winning the sight through distortion and surprise — sliced and layered with edgy cuts, folds, pleats, weaves and inlays. Safe to say, furniture and accents dare to look more like couture than carpentry
